

Objection Architecture

Use a repeatable framework to understand concerns before selecting a response.

Use this guide while watching, practicing, and reviewing. Write notes in your own words, then confirm live procedures against the current SOP.

Learning objectives

- Apply Listen, Acknowledge, Ask, Redirect
- Classify common objection types
- Avoid arguing with the seller
- Choose a response that matches the concern

Key ideas

- An objection is information before it is resistance
- Acknowledge without automatically agreeing
- Ask enough to identify the real concern
- Redirect only after the seller feels heard

Practice and reflection

- Explain the main idea of Objection Architecture without reading a script.
- Name one behavior you can demonstrate in your next seller or team interaction.
- Write one question you still need a manager or current SOP to answer.
- Record the next action you will take and when you will take it.

Source of truth

Current written SOP, role sheet, offer letter, and manager direction control when live procedures or role terms differ from training.

Quick review

Use these prompts for retrieval practice. Answer first, then compare your response with the guide.

1. According to the text, what is the primary factor that distinguishes a top-performing caller from an average one?

Their response when a seller pushes back or provides an objection.

2. Why should objections be viewed as a positive sign in a real estate conversation?

They indicate the seller is engaged rather than simply hanging up.

3. If a seller truly had zero interest in selling, how would they likely respond instead of objecting?

They would say "no thanks" and hang up immediately.

4. Instead of viewing an objection as a rejection, how should a caller rewire their thinking?

As a conversation that still has momentum.

5. When a seller pushes back, what should the caller's internal mindset be?

Genuine curiosity about what is actually occurring.

6. What are the four distinct types of responses a caller will encounter?

Silence, complaints, reactionary defense responses, and real objections.
