

Humanizing the Lead

Recognize the people and pressures behind distressed-property data and determine whether BMH Group can genuinely help.

Use this guide while watching, practicing, and reviewing. Write notes in your own words, then confirm live procedures against the current SOP.

Learning objectives

- Describe the ideal seller profile
- Identify urgency, condition, equity, and decision-maker signals
- Use respectful first-person language
- Disqualify poor fits without dehumanizing the seller

Key ideas

- A lead is a person in a real situation
- Motivation is discovered through listening, not assumed from a list
- Hard filters protect both the seller and the team
- A seller's timeline and desired outcome matter as much as property data

Practice and reflection

- Explain the main idea of Humanizing the Lead without reading a script.
- Name one behavior you can demonstrate in your next seller or team interaction.
- Write one question you still need a manager or current SOP to answer.
- Record the next action you will take and when you will take it.

Source of truth

Current written SOP, role sheet, offer letter, and manager direction control when live procedures or role terms differ from training.

Quick review

Use these prompts for retrieval practice. Answer first, then compare your response with the guide.

1. How should leads in a CRM be viewed beyond being simple numbers?

As real people experiencing real-life problems.

2. What is the primary benefit of understanding a seller's situation before making a call?

It allows the caller to build more trust and have better conversations.

3. Why is 'winging it' on a call less effective than pre-call preparation?

Preparation leads to higher closing rates than just dialing without context.

4. For which specific type of seller is the investor's service most intended?

Those for whom a traditional property sale does not make sense.

5. What is a common geographical challenge for people who have inherited a property?

They often live in a different city than the property they inherited.

6. Why do heirs often avoid managing an inherited property themselves?

They lack the desire to manage tenants, contractors, or travel for repairs.
