

Objection Scripts Playbook

Practice adaptable responses for price, timing, trust, competition, and decision-maker concerns.

Use this guide while watching, practicing, and reviewing. Write notes in your own words, then confirm live procedures against the current SOP.

Learning objectives

- Select a script pattern that matches the objection
- Adapt wording without changing its intent
- Use questions to reopen dialogue
- Know when to pause and seek guidance

Key ideas

- Scripts are guardrails, not lines to recite at any cost
- Use the seller's language when reflecting a concern
- Do not answer a question you do not understand
- A graceful exit protects trust when there is no fit

Practice and reflection

- Explain the main idea of Objection Scripts Playbook without reading a script.
- Name one behavior you can demonstrate in your next seller or team interaction.
- Write one question you still need a manager or current SOP to answer.
- Record the next action you will take and when you will take it.

Source of truth

Current written SOP, role sheet, offer letter, and manager direction control when live procedures or role terms differ from training.

Quick review

Use these prompts for retrieval practice. Answer first, then compare your response with the guide.

1. What are the four components of the objection-handling framework used in the BMH training?

Listen, acknowledge, ask, and redirect.

2. According to the playbook, what is the primary purpose of drilling real objections repeatedly?

To build muscle memory so the real objections are easier to handle.

3. If a seller says 'I want more money,' what specific closing question should follow the offer to check for more room?

Are you ready to sign and move forward today?

4. Why does the playbook advise against giving your price first on a call?

The seller might shop your number and reject you before you even see the house.

5. When a seller claims they don't know their price, what 'imagination' prompt does the playbook suggest?

If you truly don't know, imagine you did know-what would that look like?

6. What analogy involving a car is used to encourage a seller to provide a starting price?

The Craigslist analogy: you wouldn't list a car for $0 and say 'make me an offer.'
