

Follow-Up Cadence

Use planned, respectful follow-up to stay present without turning persistence into pressure.

Use this guide while watching, practicing, and reviewing. Write notes in your own words, then confirm live procedures against the current SOP.

Learning objectives

- Apply the follow-up cadence
- Choose a relevant reason for each contact
- Record every attempt and next action
- Recognize when to pause or stop outreach

Key ideas

- Every follow-up should add context or make the next step easier
- Honor opt-outs and communication preferences
- Use multiple approved channels when appropriate
- Consistency matters more than one aggressive burst

Practice and reflection

- Explain the main idea of Follow-Up Cadence without reading a script.
- Name one behavior you can demonstrate in your next seller or team interaction.
- Write one question you still need a manager or current SOP to answer.
- Record the next action you will take and when you will take it.

Source of truth

Current written SOP, role sheet, offer letter, and manager direction control when live procedures or role terms differ from training.

Quick review

Use these prompts for retrieval practice. Answer first, then compare your response with the guide.

1. According to the text, where do real estate deals actually happen?

In the follow-up process.

2. Most real estate deals close on which call attempts?

The second, third, or sometimes seventh call.

3. What is the primary characteristic of sellers who eventually sign contracts?

They were contacted consistently, professionally, and with real care.

4. In the context of seller leads, what does 'not ready today' typically mean?

The timing has not lined up yet or the situation is not urgent enough.

5. According to industry data, how many follow-up attempts do most investors make before stopping?

One or two attempts.

6. Statistically, most real estate deals close after at least how many touches?

Five or more touches.
