

Conversation Flow Mastery

Keep difficult conversations moving through thought experiments, option framing, price exploration, and respectful repositioning.

Use this guide while watching, practicing, and reviewing. Write notes in your own words, then confirm live procedures against the current SOP.

Learning objectives

- Use thought experiments to create clarity
- Frame available paths without false urgency
- Explore price expectations
- Re-engage or de-position gracefully

Key ideas

- Offer choices only when each choice is real
- Use curiosity to test assumptions
- Do not trap a seller into defending a number
- A clean de-position can preserve a future relationship

Practice and reflection

- Explain the main idea of Conversation Flow Mastery without reading a script.
- Name one behavior you can demonstrate in your next seller or team interaction.
- Write one question you still need a manager or current SOP to answer.
- Record the next action you will take and when you will take it.

Source of truth

Current written SOP, role sheet, offer letter, and manager direction control when live procedures or role terms differ from training.

Quick review

Use these prompts for retrieval practice. Answer first, then compare your response with the guide.

1. According to Module 14, what is the recommended opening line to start a real estate conversation flow?

"Catch me up to speed. Where are you at in the process right now?"

2. Why is the opening line "Catch me up to speed" considered effective for engaging sellers?

It encourages dialogue without making the seller feel interrogated and signals you are already informed.

3. What question should you ask to discover how a seller has interacted with your competitors?

"How have the other investors treated you?"

4. What question is used to determine if a seller has already consulted with a professional representative?

"What did your real estate agent say?"

5. What is the psychological benefit of assuming a seller has already explored other options?

It lowers the seller's guard and extracts intelligence without the negotiator appearing nosy.

6. In a negotiation, what does a seller's complaint about "lowballer" investors indicate to the buyer?

It provides specific intelligence on how the buyer should position their own offer as different.
