

Closing and Deal Engineering

Prepare and present an offer as a clear next step while protecting accuracy, consent, and handoff quality.

Use this guide while watching, practicing, and reviewing. Write notes in your own words, then confirm live procedures against the current SOP.

Learning objectives

- Prepare the information needed for an offer
- Present terms cleanly
- Identify unresolved decision barriers
- Confirm the next action without pressure

Key ideas

- A strong close starts with accurate discovery
- State what is known and what still requires confirmation
- Let the seller evaluate the tradeoff
- Document the decision and exact next step

Practice and reflection

- Explain the main idea of Closing and Deal Engineering without reading a script.
- Name one behavior you can demonstrate in your next seller or team interaction.
- Write one question you still need a manager or current SOP to answer.
- Record the next action you will take and when you will take it.

Source of truth

Current written SOP, role sheet, offer letter, and manager direction control when live procedures or role terms differ from training.

Quick review

Use these prompts for retrieval practice. Answer first, then compare your response with the guide.

1. In a successful sales process, why should the closing stage ideally be the easiest part?

Because the rapport, discovery, and objection handling have already been completed successfully.

2. By the time the closing stage is reached, how has the seller typically already decided about the deal?

They have decided to do business with the person they like and trust.

3. The close is described as the ____ that makes the decision official.

formal agreement

4. Which specific team is responsible for presenting the offer and negotiating terms?

The acquisition team.

5. How does a representative's discovery work directly support the acquisition team during the close?

It provides the specific information and documentation the team needs to structure the offer.

6. Why is it important for a representative to understand how the closing process works?

It allows them to help with follow-ups and perform better discovery for the acquisition team.

Manager review notes
